Email Notification for Library Materials

Adult patrons may request an email notification of materials checked out by minor family members.

If an adult patron wishes to be notified the following will be required;

All minor children MUST have an adult email address associated with their account

Minor children cannot “opt out” of having the notification sent to the parent.

Children may no longer use the self-checkout option if the parents request an email notification.

Email contact information must be updated on the adult and minor library card to include the adult email address.

Staff procedures

Display information notifying the public of the “opt in” availability for email notification of youth materials.

If a patron requests a notification, update contact information include updated/correct email addresses on patron home page

In “extended info” on the patrons account home page type in “Email Parent”

Staff retraining to remind them to look at the note in the top right corner of the home screen of a patron/minor. If “Email Parent” is in the note, click the email notification box at the bottom of the screen.

BEGINNING OCTOBER 13

PARENTS CAN OPT IN TO RECEIVE EMAILS
WHEN THEIR CHILD
CHECKS OUT LIBRARY
MATERIALS

IN ORDER TO SIGN UP, PARENTS MUST:

- 1. BE LISTED ON THE LIBRARY CARD
ACCOUNT AS A PARENT/GUARDIAN
- 2. HAVE A VALID EMAIL ADDRESS ON FILE

PLEASE SEE THE LIBRARIAN FOR MORE INFORMATION

Possible challenge procedures:

1. Any cardholding patron can challenge one book at a time at their home library. "Home library" is determined by a person's address on the library record. The challenge will apply only to the patron's home library.
2. The patron will fill out the attached form and take it to their library. At that time, they will schedule a meeting with the librarian.

The librarian can set up their own calendar system. For example: designate a regular day as "challenge day," eg 2nd Wednesday of each month. There could be a morning meeting and an afternoon meeting,

A book will be scheduled depending on the dates available and the number of pages to be read. For example: War and Peace could be scheduled for next year.

3. If the Borough feels there should be an appeal process, they could be heard by a designated committee. The committee would meet in the library's community so that citizens of that community could furnish input. The final decision would affect only that library. The Librarian will furnish the borough with challenge and outcome.

A second possible procedure.

The librarian will accept the challenge paperwork and give the patron a date on which they can expect a written answer. There would be no face-to-face meeting unless the librarian feels it is necessary. The rest of the procedure remains the same.

A third possible procedure.

There would be no formal challenge. Make it known to the community that the librarian is available to discuss concerns that their patrons have. Let the Librarian and the patron handle it.

1. Introduction to AI

Artificial Intelligence (AI) refers to computer systems designed to perform tasks that typically require human intelligence. These tasks include understanding natural language, recognizing patterns, making decisions, and learning from data.

AI tools are increasingly used in education, recreation, and training environments to enhance learning, automate tasks, and personalize experiences.

2. Objectives of the Manual

This manual is designed to:

- Equip instructors with foundational knowledge of AI.
- Provide guidance on integrating AI tools into instructional settings.
- Highlight ethical considerations and potential risks.
- Promote safe, responsible, and effective use of AI.

3. Understanding AI Capabilities

AI systems can:

- Generate text, images, and audio.
- Analyze data and provide insights.
- Translate languages and summarize content.
- Simulate conversations and provide tutoring.
- Automate administrative tasks.

However, AI is not sentient, infallible, or capable of independent thought. It operates based on patterns in data and predefined algorithms.

4. Practical Applications in Instructional Settings

Instructors can use AI to:

- Create lesson plans and instructional materials.
- Provide personalized feedback to learners.
- Facilitate interactive learning experiences.
- Automate grading and assessments.
- Support learners with disabilities through adaptive technologies.

5. Ethical Use of AI

Ethical AI use involves:

- Transparency: Informing learners when AI is used.
- Privacy: Protecting personal data and avoiding surveillance.
- Fairness: Avoiding bias and ensuring equitable access.
- Accountability: Taking responsibility for decisions made with AI assistance

6. Risks and Potential Harms (Expanded with Examples)

A. Misinformation and Inaccuracy

Example: An instructor uses an AI tool to generate historical content for a lesson. The AI incorrectly states that the Civil War ended in 1870 instead of 1865. If unchecked, this misinformation could mislead students and undermine trust in instructional materials.

B. Bias and Discrimination

Example: An AI grading system trained on past student data consistently scores essays written by non-native English speakers lower due to linguistic bias, even when the content is strong. This perpetuates unfair academic outcomes.

C. Privacy Violations

Example: A school uses an AI chatbot to help students with mental health questions. If the chatbot stores sensitive conversations without proper encryption or consent, it could expose personal data and violate privacy laws like FERPA.

D. Overreliance

Example: Students begin using AI to write essays and complete assignments without understanding the material. This leads to reduced critical thinking skills and academic dishonesty, especially if instructors do not have safeguards in place.

E. Emotional and Psychological Impact

Example: A student interacts with an AI tutor that mimics human empathy. When the AI fails to respond appropriately to a personal concern, the student feels dismissed or misunderstood, which can negatively affect their emotional well-being.

F. Security Risks

Example: An AI-powered learning platform is hacked, exposing student records and assessment data. This breach could lead to identity theft or reputational damage for the institution.

7. Best Practices for Safe and Effective Use

- Always review AI-generated content before sharing.
- Use AI as a supplement, not a replacement, for human instruction.
- Ensure compliance with data protection regulations (e.g., FERPA, GDPR).
- Encourage learners to critically evaluate AI outputs.
- Stay informed about updates and limitations of AI tools.

8. Resources and Support

- Internal training modules on AI tools
- IT and data privacy officers
- AI ethics guidelines from reputable organizations (e.g., UNESCO, IEEE)
- Community forums and professional development groups

Gov. Matt Meyer signs the Freedom to Read Act and the Uniform Public Expression Protection into law Monday at Joseph E. Johnson Elementary in Wilmington, Del.

Delaware enshrines the prevention of ideological book bans in public and school libraries and builds upon its laws protecting residents from freedom of speech lawsuits.

The two bills were signed into law Monday by Gov. Matt Meyer, who says both pieces of legislation will ensure "Delaware's kids know the power of reading and the power of using their voice."

"It's important that these kids see books that speak to them and that make them feel good about who they are and who they aspire to be, and books can do that, and libraries do all of that," Gov. Meyer said during the bill signing ceremony at Joseph E. Johnson Elementary. "Our libraries have the potential to empower the next generation of Delawareans to think critically, to ask important questions and grow into the type of empathetic citizens and leaders we want them to be, and that's not going to happen if we isolate or exclude certain texts or ideas from our public spaces."

The Freedom to Read Act was passed with some bipartisan support in the General Assembly and ensures books are not removed from public and school libraries for identity-based, ideological or religious reasons.

Delaware State Education Association (DSEA) President Stephanie Ingram, who leads a union of over 14,000 educators statewide, says censorship and book ban efforts are the byproduct of a culture war that seeks to silence opposing perspectives.

"Over the last five years, we have seen a massive surge of book bans and other forms of censorship in libraries across the country. Most of these efforts sprang up from newly formed pressure groups and individual ideologues, and most of those efforts are focused on eradicating LGBTQ+ voices and people of color," Ingram said. "The Freedom to Read Act creates a simple, fair, and uniform process that all of our libraries can follow to safely cultivate and nurture their collections, free from the influence of manufactured controversies and political partisanship."

The new law is largely a proactive measure for Delaware libraries, as only one instance of book removals has been publicly reported within the state — those books were returned to the shelves within months.

Under the new law, school districts and charter schools must develop policies and procedures to review objections to material in school libraries.

The bill ensures library materials under review due to an objection from a member of the public must remain available for use by public library patrons until the review process is concluded — only a resident, business owner, property owner of the area the public library serves or a taxpayer of a library district financing a library may submit an objection to material in that library.

"We're standing in a state, the First State, a state in which we're facing a literacy crisis and banning books is highly unproductive in addressing our literacy crisis holistically, systemically and systematically, which is what I am here to do with all of you," said Delaware's Education Secretary Cindy Marten. "Not just here in this library, but here in this state, here on this earth, here in partnership with our educators, our elected our appointed leaders — we know what to do to address literacy, and this takes us one step forward."

Gov. Meyer also signed a bill that protects the public's right to engage in activities protected by the First Amendment without expensive legal retaliation.

The Uniform Public Expression Protection Act builds upon Delaware's existing laws that protect residents from strategic lawsuits against public participation, also known as anti-SLAPP legislation.

Delaware's existing anti-SLAPP law received a D- from the Institute for Free Speech due to the limited types of speech it protects, and State Sen. Spiros Mantzavinos' new bill provides more robust protections.

While SLAPPs often appear as defamation, privacy or nuisance claims, Mantzavinos argues these lawsuits are really aimed at stopping constitutionally protected speech and can often be costly to the defendant.

He points out the bill passed unanimously in both chambers with one Republican member of the House abstaining.

"So these are very important signals that here, at least here in the First State, Democrats, Republicans, folks from across the ideological spectrum can come together and agree on one thing, our speech. Free speech is important, free speech needs to be protected," Sen. Mantzavinos said.

Similar legislation has been adopted by 10 states, including New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and is currently pending in 10 other states.
